8 things to consider when buying investment property

Real estate can be a great investment, but picking the wrong property is disastrous.

by David Schepp for USNews.com

March 10, 2016

For months now, the U.S. Housing market has been hampered by too few homes being chased by too many buyers, limiting choice for potential buyers and pushing up home prices - and even resulting in bidding wars in hotter markets.

The persistent shortage of property resulted in the fewest number of contracts in a year to buy existing homes in January, according to the National Association of Realtors, which warned that tight housing inventories could slow the housing market just as the spring selling season gets underway.

The shortage of properties is a problem not only for those looking for a place to live, but for those who are looking to invest in real estate, seeing returns in the form of rental income or profit derived from the sale of rehabbed homes.

"Buyers of all kinds, including investors, are finding it a challenge to find a home in our market due to low inventory," says Monica Ajer, an agent with Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage in Berkeley, California. "As spring nears, more properties are entering the market, but there are still way more buyers than homes" Ajer says. "Homes that need significant repair and upgrading have a hard time getting a price increase," she says. "It's kind of like bidding war, where a home is but are in hot locations may be wise investments," she says, but bidding wars are breaking out among those who recognize that potential.

That's not only true in the Bay Area, where Ajer sells, but also in markets nationwide. Denver, Dallas/Fort Worth, Portland, Oregon, and Richmond, Virginia are among 10 of the nation's hottest markets for 2016, according to Zillow, a real estate information website.

Whether you're considering purchasing a multi-unit complex for immediate rental, buying a home now with the idea of selling it a few years of profiting from the purchase of a fixer-upper that can be resold at a much higher prices, here's what to look for when considering real estate as an investment:

1. Plan on a big down payment.

Mortgage insurance isn't available for investment properties so a 20 percent down payment is required to get traditional financing. And putting even more down can result in a better rate. Also, loans costs are generally higher for investment properties.

2. Enjoy being handy and fixing things. Opting for the landlord route brings with it lots of challenges including making repairs. Be sure to have enough savings on hand to handle any unexpected repairs in the short term - before the rent checks start rolling in.3. Income varies.

Tenants come and go, and it may take a while to rent out a just-vacated unit - especially if it needs substantial repairs or rehabbing, reducing your income. But you'll still have to pay the bills including mortgage, property taxes and insurance

4. Property Taxes.

Depending on the type of rental property purchased and how long it is kept, investors could discover...Read more...
