A Traveler's First Time on AMI

Catch the natural beauty, delicious fare and laid-back vibe of Florida's Anna Maria Island

Texting friends blew up my phone once I'd arrived at Anna Maria Island in Florida and shared my location on social media.

"You have to have breakfast at Ginny's & Jane E's!" one friend shared. "Bean Point Beach. You. Must. Go.," proclaimed another. "Promise me you'll walk along Bridge Street," said another. So why had they never mentioned Anna Maria Island to me before? One friend set me straight: "We love it so much we almost don't want to share it."

we almost don't want to share it.

And there it is: the loveliest little island community you may never have heard of. Anna Maria Island - sometimes called Anna Maria Key - is located close to Sarasota and Tampa. Its seven miles of land is banked on the west by the Gulf of Mexico, south by Longboat Pass, east by Anna Maria Sound and north by Tampa Bay. Once you cross over the bridge to get to Anna Maria Island, you realize quickly this place is completely laid-back.

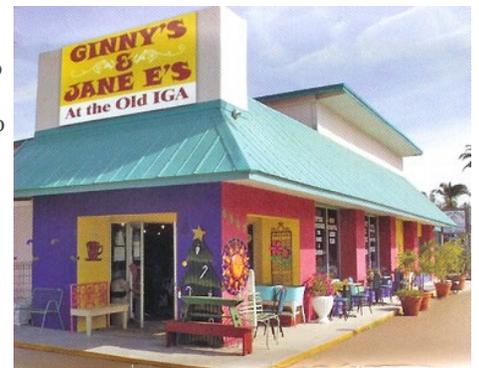

First, there's the speed limit: Almost everywhere on the island, including the "major thoroughfares," the limit is 25. You adapt to that quickly: When we left the island I screamed at my husband, "What's with the speed? You trying to break the sound barrier?" We were going 60.

We headed first to check out the beaches, and the choices are plentiful. (And the parking free at most!) We loved Manatee Public Beach for a lively vibe: Even on weekdays there were folks playing beach volleyball (set up for you) and many enjoying the waves and soft, white sand. The beach has public restrooms, outdoor showers, an ice cream spot and a cafe that serves all-you-can-eat pancakes. What more could you want? Since it looks out on the Gulf of Mexico, it's a great place to set up for the day (or afternoon) and hang out until the magnificent sunset.

Further to the south is Coquina Beach. A little more private than Manatee (but dotted with playgrounds and swings to keep kids happy), this beach is also lined with Australian pines, which create amazing, naturally shaded picnic spots. The walking and biking path along it goes on for miles, a great way to take it all in.

While all that coastline would be enough, there's plenty more. Shopping is great in two spots: Pine Avenue on the north end and Bridge Street to the south. Both areas are dotted with unique, locally owned shops where you can find artwork, beachwear and more. And the food! The friend who directed me to Ginny's & Jane E's Cafe and Gift Store was spot-on. The funky shop with a full menu served up perhaps the best breakfast sandwich (a morning twist on the Cuban sandwich) that I've ever had. We also loved a stop at The Donut Experiment. Create your own vision of the perfect doughnut and these guys make it happen.

Our favorite dinner came on our last night there. We'd had a great meal at The Gulf Drive Cafe, where you can actually dine with your toes in the sand as the sun sets. But a quick yet poorly timed thunderstorm had robbed us of that sunset view. So we returned to that Bridge Street area and grabbed a beachside table at The Beach House, noshing on locally caught seafood and soaking up that sunset. To top it off, a couple made their vows as the sun set. Perfection.

There were so many other spots too:

cocktails at the Bridge Tender Inn and Dockside Bar, with a live musician appropriately strumming Jimmy Buffett tunes. My massage at Salon Salon. "Boozy Smoothies" at Back Alley Treasures. A private and then group tennis lesson at nearby IMG Academy, where just about every tennis star ever learned. A 10-minute drive from the island, its clinics are open to visitors and can take you to the next level.

We left the island disoriented by the fast-paced world, knowing we'd be back. Keep it our secret, though...Read more... to read the full article
